SAMPA	Machine readable IPA	ASCII, phonetic square brackets
Tones	Urua tone set	small caps
POS	Essien part of speech set	italics, colon
Definition	general definition	roman
Comment	Other properties	parentheses, period

3 Lexicographic procedure

The main source for the information contained in the dictionary is the existing - but out of print - Ibibio dictionary by Elaine Kaufman¹

Table 2: Tabular lexical information acquisition.

aa	HH	interj	indicates surprise
aa	HF	interj	indicates surprise
aafo	LHL	n	[Eng 'Half'] half penny
aafu	LHL	n	[Eng 'Half'] half penny
aak	HD ĤF	interj	please (emphatic, persuasive, very polite)
aakpONO	LLHH	n	named child (someone named after another, each is 'akp'ON'O to the other)
aba edem	HF LL	n	the back (anat) ('ed'em back, side)
aba(1)	LL	n	cavity, hollow, hole aba(2)	LL	num	forty
aba(3)	LL	adv	again, anymore, still (used most commonly with a negative verb)

The dictionary was compiled using the following semi-formal procedure:

1. Collation of sources: Kaufman dictionary, corpus material, language expert consultation.
2. Scanning of legacy material was tested and did not work.
3. An initial microstructure for entering lexical information was defined.
4. A decision to enter all information in typewriter-friendly ASCII notation was made. An ASCII coding of Ibibio orthography was defined, but in fact SAMPA ASCII phonemic notation was used (with gh/h neutralised to /R/).
5. A tabular structure with entries in rows and types of lexical information in columns was defined.
6. Lexical information was entered manually into the table, using both open source and proprietary office software (OpenOffice, MS-Word), yielding a table with the structure shown in Table 2.
7. The table was exported into a character separated value (CSV) formatted text file using tabs as field separators.
8. The CSV formatted table was processed by a UNIX script with the following functions:
 - (a) Input: CSV lexical database file.
 - (b) Output: L^AT_EX typesetting markup containing front matter and main dictionary body.
 - (c) Method: Add front matter; normalise CSV file and add markup to columns.

¹Kaufman, Elaine Marlowe (1985). Ibibio Dictionary. Leiden, Netherlands: Cross River State University and Ibibio Language Board, Nigeria, in cooperation with African Studies Centre.

The UNIX script which was used for formatting, which will not be explained further here, is included in the next section for reference by those working on computational lexicography.

4 Format markup code

The following code was used for integrating front matter and adding L^AT_EX format markup. The front matter is inserted from a separate file.
